Visits to Pappu's house brought sunshine in Rahul's otherwise drab life. Because on these days Rahul got an opportunity to see Sandhya, Pappu's sister. Sandhya was two years younger than him. Rahul and Sandhya used to steal glances and smiles when they could. There existed some chemistry between them despite the vast difference in their social, financial and cultural standing.

"It has been three months since anyone but Tanmay his called. When I took the initiative with Iris, it did not work out so well. I am now reluctant to meet them or even call them up, lest that is seen as being too eager, I don't know what to do or how to behave, Should I call or should I let someone else take the first step ? What I cannot understand is how we all came together after so many years in one grate wave and then lost each other all over again" said Snigdha. She looked genuinely disturbed.

Kruttika looked hard at her friend, and then it struck her in an instant. "You, who claim to be a loner, are actually hungry for companionship. Tell me, aren't you secretly excited by the prospect of reconnecting with your old friends," She probed. "But you are so caught up in the analysis of what will happen when and if you meet them that you are unable to let even the present be," she stressed.
